

RULES FOR THE GAME OF NATIONAL GALLERY

 FIRST SERIES, BRITISH SCHOOL.*

ANY number above three can play. The cards to be shuffled and dealt round. The player next the dealer (or the winner of a previous game) begins by asking for a card of any Artist (calling it by name) of which he holds either the picture or the index card. If he gets it, he continues asking for what he wants until he is refused. Then the privilege of asking devolves upon the player who refused him; he in his turn asks for any card he requires to complete his set, until he is refused; and so the game goes on.

When a player has the Index card in his hand, he knows how many pictures he requires to make up a set. Every set made up is proclaimed and laid down on the table.

The player who collects most cards is winner when all are played out, and has the privilege of the first question at the next game.

Any player withholding a card asked for forfeits a set.

Or the Game may be played thus—

1. One player to be chosen as President.
2. The President to retain the Index cards, and deal the picture cards round.
3. Six counters to be given to each player, and some put in the pool.
4. The President to ask each player in turn for a picture card painted by the Artist he mentions.
5. If a picture of another Artist be offered, the person forfeits one to the pool; but if the right one be offered, he takes one from the pool.
6. Any person relating a fact, describing or connected with the card asked for, receives an additional counter from the pool.
7. The sets being all made up, he who has most counters wins.

 A Second Series of this Game is now published which deals with the pictures belonging to the Dutch School. Price 1/-.*
