

-1-
MAINE.

Admitted 1820.

Electoral vote 6.

OF what state is Augusta the capital?

WHICH is called "The Pine Tree State"?

WHICH is the largest of the New England states, and extends farthest northeast?

IN what state is Bowdoin College?

IN what state is Bangor, one of the largest lumber depots in the world?

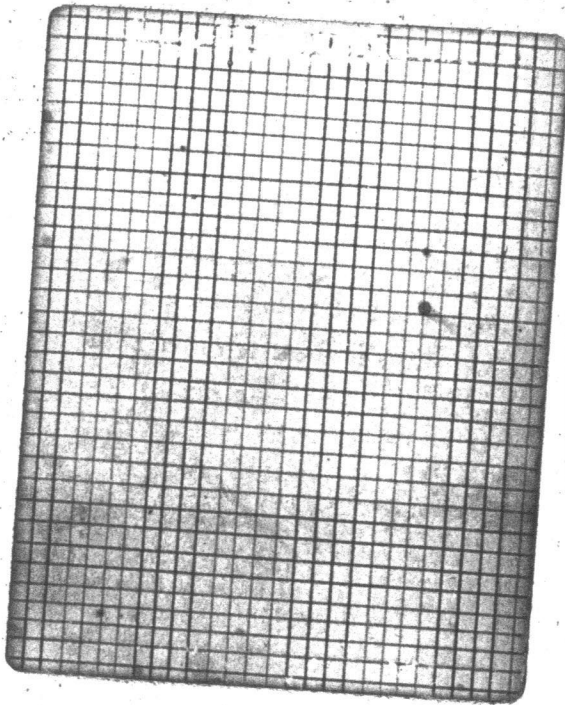

OF what eastern state is Portland the metropolis and great railroad center?

IN what state did Neal Dow secure a prohibition law in 1851?

WHAT New England state exports large quantities of ice?

WHAT state ranks second in shipping, and contains Bath noted for ship building?

IN what state are the Kennebec, Penobscot and Androscoggin Rivers?

«Directions for the Game.»

1. Any number of persons may take part in this game.
2. Let all be seated about a table. The dealer distributes one card at a time around the circle from right to left until all have three cards. He then places the pack face downward on the table. The answer to each question is the name at the top of that card.
3. The player at the left of the dealer is entitled to begin. We will call the first player A. He asks B at his left hand any question from any card in his hand. If B can answer it he takes the card and turns it face down on the table to begin a book. If B does not answer the question it goes around the circle to the left, until it is answered, or all have had a chance. The one who answers it gets the card. No one can try more than once, and the person who asks the question must not answer it, even if nobody else does. If nobody answers the question A keeps the card in his hand, and B takes his turn at asking.
4. Now B asks C at his left hand the second question in the same way. B may ask any question in his hand. C asks D the third question, and each takes his turn at asking, whoever answers the questions.
5. When any player has asked a question and given up the card to the one who answered it, he must draw another from the top of the pack, so that each player holds three cards in his hand all the time. If any player finds that he has a card from which nobody can answer any question, he may reject the card and draw another.
6. When a player has won four cards he calls it a book. The number of books to win a game depends on the number of players. If two or three persons are playing four books constitute a game. When there are four or five players three books make a game. For six or seven players two books make a game.
7. To determine who shall deal, mix the cards well and distribute one to each player. He who gets the card of the highest number is dealer for the game.
8. In a second game the dealer is the person who sat at the left of the dealer in the first game.
9. This game may be played in partnership by any even number of players. The partners sit opposite each other and keep their books together. In estimating the number of books for a game the two partners count as one player.
10. In a large company it may be necessary to vary the rules a little. One book may be taken for a game if desired. A less number than three cards may be given to each player if the company is so large that the pack does not go around.
11. IN A LARGE COMPANY, OR AT SCHOOL, a nice way is to choose sides as at a spelling match. Let one be appointed questioner. He selects two leaders who choose the players alternately. They take their places on two sides as they are called. The questioner mixes the cards and places them on a table with the faces downward. He then picks up the top card and asks one of the leaders a question. He then picks up the question goes from one side to the other until it is answered. The questioner then takes the next card and asks the next player a question. The game may be continued until the pack is played out. The side holding the most cards wins, and the person who holds the greatest number is entitled to the honors of the game. Instead of passing cards to the winner, one may keep tally if preferred.
12. A spirit of generous rivalry may be aroused by conducting the game as in spelling down in a spelling class.

A GAME OF THE STATES
OF E. F. G. DECKER
1887